Description:

Stewart Dubinsky knew his father, David, had served in World War II, but had been told very little about his experiences. When he finds, after his father's death, a packet of wartime letters to a former fiancee and learns of David's court-martial, Stewart is driven to uncover the truth about this enigmatic, distant man he never knew. Using military archives, old letters, and David's own notes, he discovers that David, a JAG lawyer, had pursued a maverick U.S. officer in Europe, fallen in love with a beautiful resistance fighter, and fought in the war's deadliest conflicts. In reconstructing the terrible events and agonizing choices his father faced on the battlefield, in the courtroom, and in love, Stewart gains a closer understanding of his father's secret past and of the brutal nature of war itself.

The secret life Of David Dubin, a JAG officer during World War II is revealed to his son Stewart shortly after his death. This revelation was made while his son was going through his fathers personal belongings. Letters hidden away in a closet were discovered. It was revealed that his father had been having a love affair with another woman. And if that wasnt enough, he had also been recommended for a court-martial. Stewart is determined to learn everything he can about the father he never really knew. Arduously, his fathers life during the war is put back together, piece-by-piece. What he ultimately learns is earth-shattering. His feelings about his father have forever changed. The author goes to great lengths to describe many of the horrific events that occurred during one of the darkest times of our nations history. At times, the grizzly facts of war and human suffering were shown to be exceedingly graphic. Sadly, we come to witness the descent of someones life as a result of the ravages of war. The story progressed from chapter to chapter. From beginning to end, I was driven to read on.
